1. It is rumored in Vienna that Dr. Guido Schmidt, who after the Anschluss became a director of the Hermann Goering Werke and who was arrested after the end of the war and is now in Vienna for trial as a traitor, seems to be protected by Russian influence.
 2. The explanation seems to be that Schmidt's brother-in-law, Dr. Hubert Breitenfeld, has one of the highest positions in the Russian-sponsored German Department of Commerce in Berlin. In this way Breitenfeld would seem to be returning the protection that Schmidt gave him during the war, when Breitenfeld, whose father was Jewish, was able to maintain his position as a director of the Preussische Hypothekenbank in Berlin. Breitenfeld's and Schmidt's families are living in St. Anton on the Arlberg in the French Zone of Austria, where they have bought the luxurious villa of Mrs. Millicent Rogers of New York.
